

Novethic is the French partner of the first pan-European training course on responsible investment

Paris, May 28. Novethic is adding another string to its bow in the field of responsible investment. After the certification of financial products and the production of theme-based research, it is now contributing to a pan-European training project on sustainable responsible investment (SRI). The project, financed by the European Commission, is set for launch in October 2015.

Pan-European SRI training for financial advisers

The “Sustainable and Responsible Investment Training” project is aimed at teaching financial advisers how to support their clients in the choice of investments integrating environmental, social and governance (ESG) criteria. Available in English, French, German and Swedish, the course will include a main common module and a module on the national specifics of each country. It will foster dialogue on best training practices and the development of new educational tools and methods with a view to their broader dissemination across Europe. A pilot phase with financial advisers will be organised in June and July 2015.

Novethic, French partner of the nine selected European specialists

The project was created by a network of nine partners: Akaryon (Austria), ECOeffekt (Germany), Ethix (Sweden), FNG (Germany, Austria, Switzerland), Novethic (France), ÖGUT (Austria), Kaleidos Fachhochschule Schweiz (Switzerland), UGent (Belgium) and UKSIF (UK). These partners are designing the content of the training together and implementing it with financial advisers, bank advisers and wealth management advisers in their countries of origin. In France, Novethic is responsible for promoting the training course in partnership with the French Social Investment Forum (FIR).
